OREGON OBSIDIAN SOURCES

SURVEYOR SPRING

ALTERNATE NAMES: Rock Creek, Surveyor Springs, Twelvemile Canyon.

LOCATION - COUNTY: Lake County, Oregon, and Washoe County, Nevada.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL SIGNIFICANCE: Trace element studies of artifacts from regional sites and the presence of large amounts of chipping debris in the source area indicate that the glass from Surveyor Spring was intensively utilized.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS: Alex Atkins, John Fagan.

REFERENCES

Ambroz, Jessica A.
1997 Characterization of Archaeologically Significant Obsidian Sources in Oregon by Neutron Activation Analysis. Unpublished Master's Thesis, Department of Chemistry, University of Missouri, Columbia, Missouri.

Hughes, Richard E.
1986 Diachronic Variability in Obsidian Procurement Patterns in Northeastern California and Southcentral Oregon. University of California Publications in Anthropology 17, Berkeley, California.

King, Jerome
2016 Obsidian Conveyance Patterns. In Prehistory of Nevada's Northern Tier: Archaeological Investigations Along the Ruby Pipeline, edited by William Hildebrandt, Kelly McGuire, Jerome King, Allika Ruby, and D. Craig Young, pp. 303-327. American Museum of Natural History Anthropological Papers No. 101, New York, New York.

Moore, Joe
2009 Great Basin Tool-Stone Resources: The NDOT Obsidian and Tool-Stone Sourcing Project - 2002 Progress Report (Draft). Report prepared by the Cultural Resource Section, Nevada Department of Transportation, Carson City Nevada.